Ever since the dawn of time, hares and tortoises have competed each other. But these days, it's very hard to guess who will win, because hares and tortoises now drive high-performance racing vehicles. As luck would have it, the hares and the tortoises have got a race scheduled for this very morning.

Each vehicle has one pilot and one co-pilot. Both teams are waiting impatiently for the starting signal. Finally, they get the all-clear. The roar of the engines draws whoops from the spectators. In the crowd, hares, rabbits and other jumpers are leaping up and down to show support for their team. Among the tortoises, snakes, lizards and other reptiles, the fans hiss and drum on shells.

The hares' car is shaped like a carrot. The tortoise car, covered in a shell, looks indestructible. The two vehicles speed off.

These vehicles have been specially equipped by their teams with incredible gadgets to play tricks on their opponents. The hares immediately take the lead. The tortoises press a button, and a cannon rises up and fires a bale of hay that lands just in front of the carrot car.

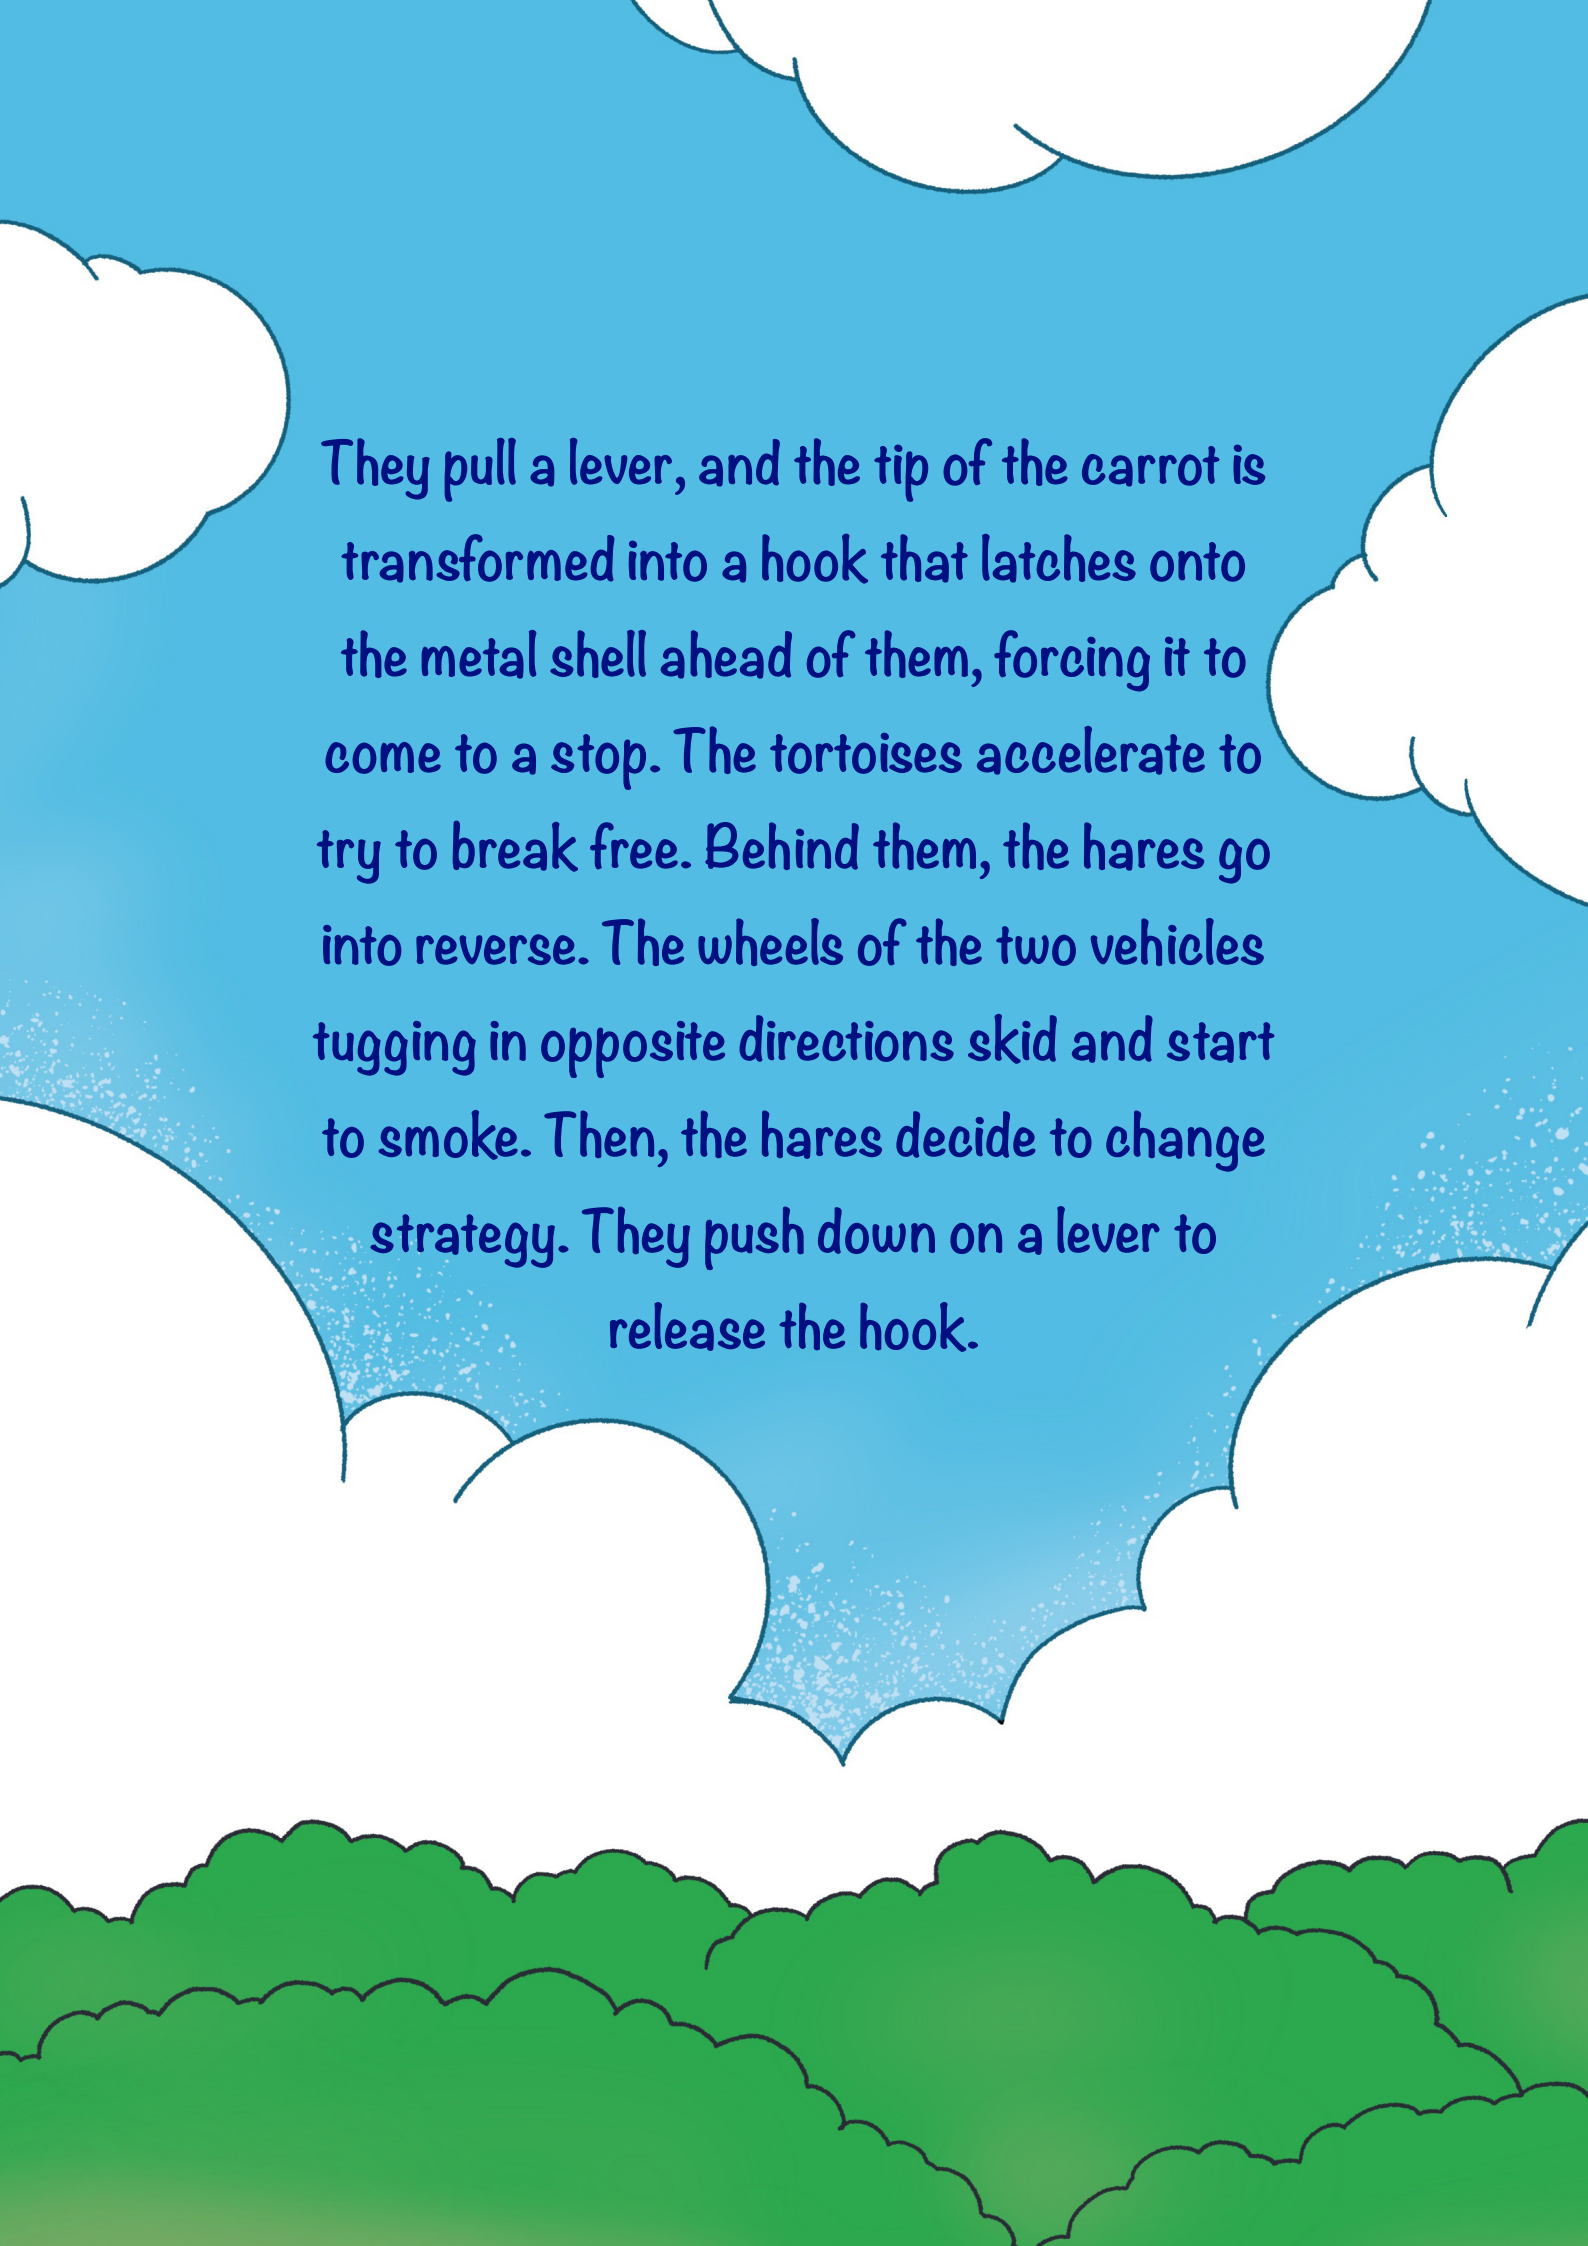

The hares screech to a halt, allowing the tortoises to whizz past them, gaining the upper hand. But the hares have plenty of tricks up their sleeves! They activate 'turbo mode'.

The tortoises, who can see in their rearview mirror that a rocket ship is about to zoom past them, deploy another gadget. Scales pop out of either side of their car, blocking the hares from overtaking. The hares swerve into the hard shoulder and manage to just squeeze through. The tortoises are back in second place.

But as they go over a bump in the track, they take off! The metal shell starts spinning like a frisbee. The hares watch the giant steel capsule containing the tortoises spinning above them. The shell lands in front of them. It bounces a few times, then speeds off again. The hares are struggling to deal with such tenacious opponents.

They pull a lever, and the tip of the carrot is transformed into a hook that latches onto the metal shell ahead of them, forcing it to come to a stop. The tortoises accelerate to try to break free. Behind them, the hares go into reverse. The wheels of the two vehicles tugging in opposite directions skid and start to smoke. Then, the hares decide to change strategy. They push down on a lever to release the hook.

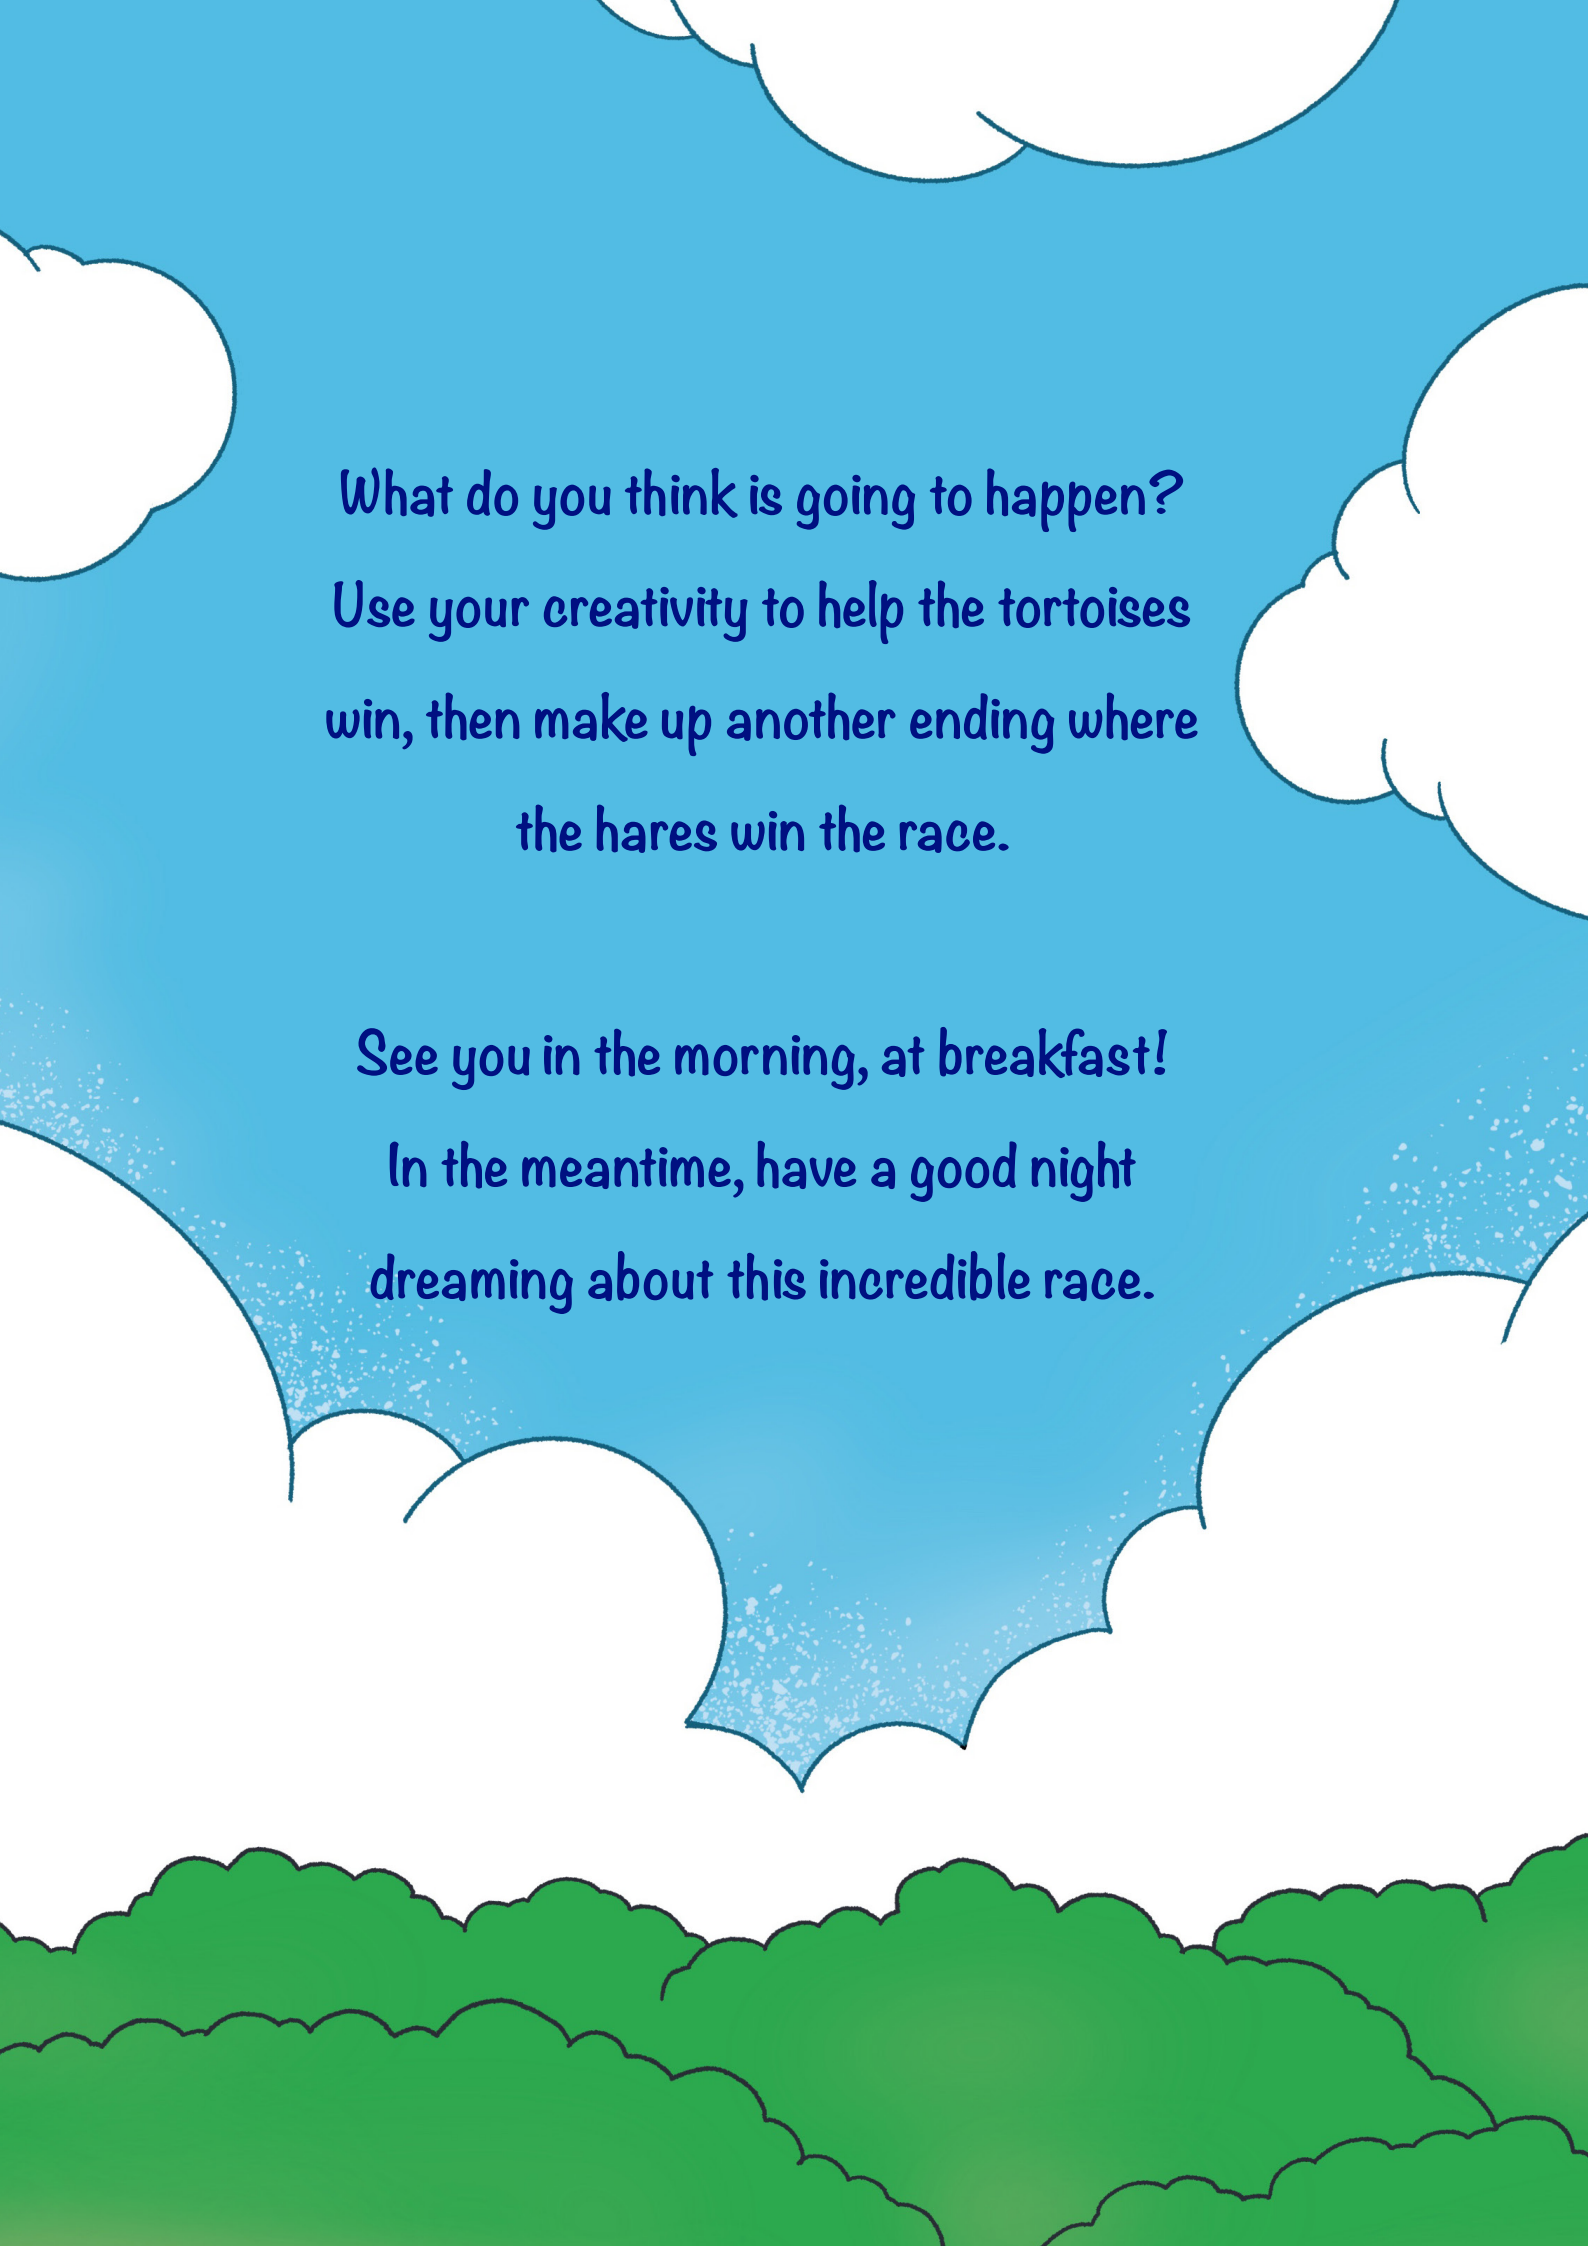

They only have one last roll of the dice left: the twister drill. They pull another lever and the racing carrot starts to spin. The engine roars. Earth flies everywhere. The carrot disappears, digging its way into a tunnel. Suddenly, a powerful geyser bursts out of the ground!

The track is flooded, and turns into a long, chocolate-coloured river. But seeing as nothing can stop our rival racers, there's only one solution: continue racing on the water.

What do you think is going to happen?
Use your creativity to help the tortoises win, then make up another ending where the hares win the race.

See you in the morning, at breakfast!
In the meantime, have a good night dreaming about this incredible race.
